RESEARCH INTEREST

My research looks at how individuals relate to their work, their occupations, and the organizations they belong to. I examine more specifically the practices people engage in at work that allow them to sustain their chosen cultures or identities. In doing so, my research contributes to a better understanding of how these cultures and identities come to be and manifest themselves. Studied occupations have included airport security officers, clinical anatomists, factory craftsmen, ghostwriters, puppeteers, subway drivers, and university professors.
